Postoperative electrocardiographic (ECG) changes have been observed after major gastrointestinal surgery. The purposes of this review are to identify ECG characteristics associated with postoperative complications, describe the role of prognosis, evaluate the causes of ECG changes and suggest a possible interpretation. A systematic review of databases was performed for all literature published until January 2013 in which ECG were performed in the postoperative period after major abdominal surgery. Data from all original articles were collected and analysed. Seven retrospective studies were included and a total of 10141 patients with ECGs were analysed. The most common ECG feature that reflected a postoperative complication was the development of new QT prolongation. Prolongation of the QTc, left ventricular hypertrophy, P wave duration and ST-segment depression were also related to complications. The duration of postoperative hospital stay was significantly longer in patients with prolonged QTc than in patients with normal ECGs. Prolongation of the QTc after major abdominal surgery may be a marker of a postoperative complication or of potential cardiac, respiratory or neurological complications.Sponsorship We would like to express our greatest appreciation and thanks to all of our sponsors and those who have supported our program since it's inception. We are pleased and grateful to have such strong supporters of the Boys Club. The Hertel Foundation, Investors Group, and Cornerstone are the primary sponsors of our Boys Club Charities Winter Coat Drive. Their support enables us to give back to the students and families of Berkeley East and West Middle Schools. A major thanks goes to the IGA Family Dollar stores in Berkeley Township, Ewing Township, and Toms River. It is these stores that have helped us collect over 500 coats for our long term winters coat drive. A special thanks to the many individual donors who have also helped the Boys Club Charities. The amount donated is what enables us to provide shoes and winter coats to the students in the Berkeley, West Middle, and East Middle Schools. Past and future sponsors of the Boys Club Charities winter coat drive include: Ashford Bank Kenta & Associates Lycoming General Insurance Co The North Jersey Church of the Cross Act One Donations
