Audiogate 2.3 24

I have tried making a new audio file with 24bit/48khz sample rate but when I play this audio file on GRAB player or JRiver and use audiogate 2.3 to decode/resample and encode it, I get a 30khz (192khz) file. I am not sure what is going on. A: Your encoded audio is already DSD64. DSD is a data format that is capable of storing 64 times more information than a conventional CD for the same bit rate, with no loss of quality. It is normally used for 24-bit/48k recordings. So if you have the DSD64 sample rate set as the default, then when you encode the audio file, the encoder will use DSD64 as the source rate and encode as DSD64. Also, the default of 24-bit output does result in a bitrate of 192kHz. So in your case, you may want to set the output bitrate to be 24-bit to match the DSD64 sample rate.
