SHADENOORDER: When using the font in text, it is recommended to place the text in a position in which the letters face the outside of the letterform to make the font more readable. Thus the letters 'A', 'E', 'I', 'O', 'U', 'Y', 'V' and 'W' stand straight forward. Apply the typefaces SHADENOORDER to get the desired result. SHADENOORDER is a typeface kit with six typefaces in a special order and a special shadenoorder in the typeface menu. SHADENOORDER is a combo kit with a dozen of original typeface and a special shadenoorder in the typeface menu. SHADENOORDER is a custom kit with all the typefaces in the shadenoorder and a special shadenoorder in the typeface menu.

In addition, so-called "historical" methods are used, which are now being incorporated into the U.S. Air Force "B" model of the Advanced Tactical Bomber. The delivery of guided munitions is a complex problem, since the use of relatively small-diameter bombs requires that a way be found to improve the accuracy of their delivery. Although the time for flight of a bomb dropped from an aircraft is not very different from that of a missile, the delivery accuracy of a missile is far superior. In an attempt to improve the accuracy of the munitions, a wide variety of approaches have been taken. The munition can be guided in space or time by radio waves, by using the radar system to lock onto the target or by using a separate weapon and tracking radar to lock onto the missile itself and guide it to the target. Missile guidance is most often accomplished by a vehicle-mounted guidance system, where the aircraft drops a missile with the desired characteristics from the aircraft. A less common guidance method is to fire a missile from a towed vehicle, usually from a ground platform. Guided missiles Missiles can be guided by a wide variety of methods, which can include: Brute force – The missile is guided
