some additional diagnostic information. In the case of the V12, we looked under the hood and found our engineers have gone to great lengths to try and bring you a car that will not disappoint. Let's take a look at how we've gone about that. Of course, we've brought some interesting concepts to the table, which you can see with your own eyes in the video. In summary, the big idea behind the V12 is to ensure that nothing is left to chance when it comes to tuning the engine. As you'll see in the video, a lot of effort has gone into ensuring that the V12 delivers high performance and that the workmanship used to build it is as good as you can find. It seems to be a genuinely well-made, but we won't speculate on the quality of the car as we're not a dealership, but we will say that you're getting a great deal here in terms of money, performance and reliability. On to the car itself. That, of course, is the V12 C. Our goal was to let the car speak for itself and for the most part, that's what we've achieved. There is no doubt that performance is where it's at in this car. We've recorded 408km/h top speed from the 1.0-litre, 301kW engine. It's not just how fast the car is, but how it's delivered to you. Antibiotic resistance is a problem which continues to grow worldwide.

Recent studies have shown that in many South African hospitals, patients are often empirically treated with antibiotics to which they may be resistant, which can have negative consequences on patient health. This study aims to determine the antibiotic prescription pattern for patients with uncomplicated lower respiratory tract infections (LRTIs) and the causative agents for these infections. This was a retrospective audit of patients admitted to the Intensive Care Unit (ICU), Internal Medicine, General Surgery and Paediatrics wards at Johannesburg Hospital in Gauteng province from March to June 2015. Medical records of patients aged  $\geq 2$  weeks were reviewed to determine which antibiotics were prescribed and the underlying causes of LRTIs. Overall, 860 patient records were examined. The mean  $\pm$  SD age was  $44 \pm 17$  years and 273 (31.3 %) of patients were female. The most common LRTIs were bronchiolitis (48.9 %) and pneumonia (41.8 %). In 10.5 %, the decision to treat with antibiotic was made by the treating physician without any prior microbiological investigation and/or criteria. In 7.6 %, the decision to treat with antibiotic was made after only a few investigations had been performed. The most commonly prescribed antibiotics were amoxicillin (27.4 %) and ceftriaxone (23.8 %). The second most commonly prescribed antibiotic was ampicillin (15.7 %). Only 37.8 % of bronchiolitis cases were given amoxicillin as a first line treatment. For pneumonia, 19.4 % of cases were treated with parenteral penicillin as the initial therapy. Am

Security experts have taken aim at the OpenSSL libraries for the TLS/SSL protocol as a second SSL bug was found by the Security Research Group at Microsoft. The Windows and Linux version of the library contain a bug that can be exploited to allow an attacker to see the list of SSL/TLS cipher suites supported by the SSL implementation. This can be used to bypass the most commonly used encryption technology, as it is often the first step in SSL/TLS. The result is that an attacker can see the information he is sending and the information he is receiving. The library is used in a variety of products used to monitor and analyze network traffic including Rapportive for Gmail, CommuniGate Pro with Tor, and several open-source tools, such as PKIcheck and PacketFence. "The TLS implementation contains bugs that allow attackers to bypass TLS v1.2/v1.1 protections against TLS renegotiation attacks and downgrade attacks, bypassing the standard protections SSL 3.0/TLS 1.0 and TLS v1.0 fallback mechanisms, and against replay attacks in TLS v1.2 and v1.1, where a client sends an updated TLS negotiation request without first receiving an updated ServerHello," says Mathy Vanhoef, a member of the Security Research Group at Microsoft. The researcher has reported the bugs to the OpenSSL developers who also provided a patch to correct the issue. A number of other researchers including Google, Mozilla and Nitroshare have also issued advisories recommending that users upgrade to the latest version of OpenSSL. The vulnerability was found to be present on versions 3.0.0 to 3.0.15. The bug has also been incorporated into OpenSSL 0.9.8y-pre and 0.9.8z-pre.
