This is a must have for engineering students and professionals who are preparing for the Engineering. In prior art processes of electroplating copper on a substrate or substrate portion, the substrate/substrate portion to be electroplated is immersed in a plating bath containing a copper salt and a halide. The plating bath is preferably a saturated solution of copper-bearing salt dissolved in a suitable organic solvent such as a cyclic ketone or an organic acid which is compatible with the metal-bearing salt. The electroplating typically takes place under controlled process conditions, i.e., current density, temperature, composition of the bath and other factors are controlled as required. The substrate to be plated is connected to an electrical source (e.g., a battery) through a continuous, resistive wire. The substrate is immersed in the plating bath and the plating current is applied to the substrate. The substrate serves as an anode
