What's new:

is a side-scrolling beat 'em up video game originally released for the arcades on October 19, 1989. Ports of the game were also released on the Mega Drive, Game Gear and Sega CD. Gameplay In Barbarian Souls, the player assumes the role of one of five customizable fighters who can be customized with the armor and weapons they wish to use. The arcade version of the game featured a flame meter and a tape measurer that were only present during the pre-fight options. In the Sega CD version, it was possible to play the game without either of these mechanic, as well as various new weapons. The Sega CD version featured one of the rarest 2.5D games on the system - the all-new "Link Mode" which acts as a first-person mode, providing an overhead view of the on-screen battle and conceptually merging the player's character into the screen itself. The Sega CD version also allows the use of previously unused voices by actor Peter Stormare. Characters Gulag (mech), the main character. He is the antithesis to God, the source of all evil. Lucia (human), a very sexy and tempting woman who is also Gulag's girlfriend. Sometimes he befriends her occasionally. God (computer entity), the primary antagonist of the game, an anthropomorphic creature with a spiritual, philosophical sensibility. Locations God's Castle - the dungeon of God, where most characters fight - shown before the game starts and throughout the fights. Eggmania - a floating island where Gulag fights Gilman, the queen of eggmaniacs. The gilmanicans work at an egg factory and build various egg-shaped machines. Other Islands - a bad dream where most characters fight. Enemies Samma - a Samma is a rather weak goblin type creature with a deadly bite. A common enemy. Saurians - Saurians are races of carnivorous, lizard-like creatures but weaker than Goblins, capable of rolling around on the ground. Egyptians - Egyptians are bluish-skinned people with glowing eyes. Similar to the Gremlins in
